His movement off the ball was impressive, especially considering the aggressive face-guarding he faced throughout the game. He shot the ball well from the 3-point line, showcasing a quick release and no wasted motion in his shot preparation. While he didn't handle the ball extensively, he made the most of his opportunities in transition, including picking up an assist and a highlight-reel play where he eluded a defender with a behind-the-back dribble, pushed down the middle of the court, and exploded over three defenders for a two-handed dunk with about 50 seconds left in the third quarter.

He was relentless, applying constant pressure to the ball handler and effectively navigating screens. His active hands in the passing lanes led to key plays, including an early steal in the first quarter, which he converted into a two-handed dunk. His defensive presence was marked by his ability to disrupt the offense and create transition opportunities for his team.

He demonstrated an impressive all-around game. Offensively, his off-ball movement, efficient shooting, and dynamic plays in transition highlighted his scoring and playmaking potential. Defensively, his aggressive pressure and ability to generate turnovers showcased his value on that end of the floor.
