Kendall Brown (February 21,2022, vs Oklahoma State Cowboys)

In this game, Kendall Brown struggled to score offensively. The Cowboys were aggressive and physical in cutting off Brown's driving lanes limiting the number of straight line drives he had to the rim. They also sagged off him from the three-point line making it difficult for Brown to put the ball on the floor and attack the rim. Three out of four of his field goals were three pointers. Brown had to operate more as a facilitator this game. As a playmaker, he was finding the open man and setting up his teammates for good shots off of cuts or dribble penetration when he had the chance to put the ball on the floor and attack the rim.

With the Cowboys having a lot of size, Brown was unable to create opportunities for himself off offensive rebounds. He was unable to get extra possessions and second chance opportunities for the Baylor Bears.

Brown was still able to push the pace off defensive rebounds when he had a chance this game. He is able to operate as a ball handler off of rebounds and set his teammates for open shots. A play in which he operated as a ball handler in transition and set up his teammates for a high percentage shot, was with 9:30 left in the second half. In this play, he would get the long rebound off Bryce Thompson three-point miss and use his speed to push the pace setting up Adam Flagler for an open high percentage catch and shoot pull up three in transition.

Even though Kendall Brown wasn't involved on the offensive end, he still had an impact on the defensive end. He didn't let his lack of offense affect his defensive effort. He was physical when defending on the ball. He had defensive lateral quickness and was able to get into a defensive stance limiting opponents blowing by him. He also was quick on rotations and was able to contest shots.
